THE PRESIDENT'S CORNER

Dr. Everette J. Freeman

Alum's long, successful life evidence of 'Potential. Realized.'

Clano Stephens earned an associate degree in education in 1931 from this institution when it was Georgia Normal & Agricultural College. Stephens, a remarkable man who has been a pillar of the Waycross, Ga., community for 70 years, is one of our oldest living alumni. In October he will serve as the grand marshal of the Albany State University Homecoming Parade.

This past Saturday, Stephens was honored at a reception in Waycross before the ASU vs. Savannah State football game. That event was an excellent opportunity for the ASU faithful to show support for and commune with one of our best examples of "Potential. Realized."

ASU sculpture named one of the Seven Wonders

"Soil to Sun," Albany State University's only sculpture, has been chosen in an online voting competition hosted by hbcudigest.com as one of the seven most iconic and historic emblems of HBCU culture. Designed by retired ASU Professor Emeritus Arthur Berry in 2003 to commemorate the University's centennial celebration, "Soil to Sun" has quickly become one of the most distinctive and recognizable structures in Southwest Georgia.

"I am thrilled that my sculpture has received this honor," Berry said in an interview upon hearing of his sculpture's selection. "I am thankful for all the people who voted for it."

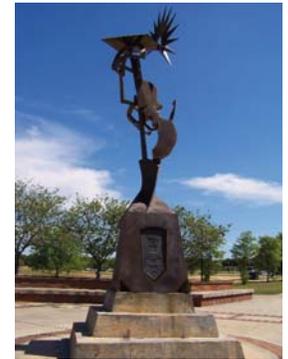

Berry, who served as chair of the Arts Department from 1967 to 1988, created the sculpture to represent Albany State's transition during its first century.

"Dr. Holley built ASU on solid soil, and we continue to reach for the sun," Berry said at the sculpture's dedication.

According to Berry, the sculpture includes a plow to represent sweat and work, a drum and violin to represent creativity and expression, a book to represent the development of the mind, a mortar cap to represent achievement,

Albany State honors Waycross alumnus

By Cindy Gambill
Executive editor

In 1925 at the age of 13, Clano Stephens left his hometown of Dawson, Ga., to earn his high school diploma and a two-year college degree at Georgia Normal & Agricultural College, which later became Albany State University.

Now 98, Stephens has lived in Waycross, Ga., for seven decades and made his mark as a businessman and community leader.

On Sept. 25, Albany State University honored Stephens for his accomplishments and dedication to his alma mater with a reception at the Quality Inn & Suites in Waycross. On Oct. 9,

Stephens will serve as the grand marshal in ASU's Homecoming Parade in downtown Albany.

"Mr. Stephens' accomplishments as an entrepreneur who continually gives back in service to his community are examples for our current ASU students," during his lifetime, grew up in nearby Terrell County, Ga. He made his way to this campus in 1925, at the age of 13. At that young age, he earned the money to pay his tuition by working on campus and during the summer at the Oil Mill in Dawson, Ga. In his six years here, he was able to complete high school and eventually college.

A charismatic and engaging gentleman, he tells some interesting stories about pre-World War II South Georgia and Albany State College. He recalls a time when the primary means of travel from Columbus, Ga., to Albany was via train.

"The trip from Dawson to Albany took an hour and a half," he said. "The train would stop at any crossing where someone wanted to get on or off."

Stephens – who at 98 still manages a small motel, his own household and even drives a car – credits his longevity and success to simply living in a "sensible way." His wisdom for living should serve as an example for our students who strive to realize their highest potential.

ASU hires fundraising executive

Sandy Yates, CFRE, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., has joined Albany State University as the associate vice president for Institutional Advancement. She joins ASU after completing her tenure at Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, where she was also an associate vice president for Institutional Advancement.

Yates, who has spent the last 20 years in fundraising, has enjoyed non-profit experiences at the Nature Conservancy, the American Red Cross, Swarthmore College and Lincoln University, where she closed the largest alumni contribution of record at $1.2 million that created an endowed scholarship and a discretionary fund for the university president.

She has previously served as vice president for Institutional Advancement for the Interdenominational Theological Center in Atlanta, Ga. She is a former facilitator for YWCA Study Circles of Diversity in Dover, Del., a board member of the Delaware Chapter of the Association of Fundraising Professionals and president of the Dover Chapter of the NAACP.

Yates, an Air Force veteran, was stationed at Little Rock Air Force Base in Little Rock, Ark., where she served as a missile facility technician. There she met her husband, who is now the Rev. James A. Platt, pastor of Nelson Chapel A.M.E. Church in Bainbridge, Ga. They have been married for 24 years. They have six sons and one daughter-in-law: Mosi, a certified information systems auditor, is married to Aziza; Manu is an assistant professor of engineering at Georgia Tech; Matthew is an assistant professor of political science at Harvard University; Ekundayo is a student at Savannah State University; Kwasi is a student at Lincoln University; and Awadi is a third-grader at Potter Street Elementary School in Bainbridge.

Yates is the daughter of the late Mae Vern Yates and the late Samuel Bowman. She attended the public schools of Philadelphia and went on to enroll at Temple University in Philadelphia, Pa. After one year of matriculation, she enlisted in the U.S. Air Force and served her country for four years. After leaving the Air Force, she has enjoyed a career in fundraising and development. She is recognized as a Certified Fund Raising Executive (CFRE) and has completed all required training and certifications. A graduate of Wesley College in Delaware, she holds a Bachelor of Science Degree in Economics.

NASA project specialist visits Albany State

By Joseph West
Publications specialist

The Albany State University Department of Research and Sponsored Programs hosted a representative of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Sept. 15 and 16. Priscilla Moore, a project specialist for NASA'S INSPIRE and Explore School programs at Kennedy Space Center, Fla., visited ASU's NASA SEMAA program and several area schools participating in the ASU NASA SEMAA program.

This trip, Moore's second to ASU in three years, was aimed at recruiting students and teachers for science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) programs. During this visit, Moore visited Monroe Comprehensive High School and Dougherty International Education Middle School and met with 60 gifted students from Merry Acres Middle School in ASU's NASA SEMAA Lab.

"The goal of our program is to attract and retain students in STEM programs and to recruit teachers for participation in NASA's professional development programs," Moore said.

As an INSPIRE project specialist, Moore works in universities and secondary schools throughout Florida, Georgia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to build community interest in science education.

NASA's Interdisciplinary National Science Project Incorporating Research and Education Experience (INSPIRE) is a multiyear program designed for students in ninth to 12th grade who are interested in (STEM) education and careers.

On June 10-11, Moore was instrumental in arranging a tour of the Kennedy Space Center

Conservation Tip of the Week

Harvest water from alternative sources and use it to irrigate plants. Collect water in rain barrels or cisterns. For each inch of rainfall, six gallons of water can be harvested per square foot of roof area.

Water Festival 2010 to be held at Flint RiverQuarium Sept. 28-30

By Camile Matthews
Student writer

About 900 fifth-graders will learn firsthand about water use and conservation during Water Festival 2010 Sept. 28-30 at the Flint RiverQuarium.

Held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. each day, the Water Festival will give students hands-on educational experiences on topics such as water and its effect on animals, standing water and mosquitoes, agricultural water use, water and soil erosion, and non-point source pollution. To accommodate the number of students, the event will have 10 education stations or workshops with information and presentations about various themes.

The goal of the event is to educate students about uses of water and encourage them to incorporate conservation methods into their daily lives, according to Linda Means, administrative specialist/coordinator with the Georgia Water Planning and Policy Center, one of the event organizers.

“We want to help conserve, reserve and protect this precious resource,” she said. “The water we have now is all the water we’re going to have. Without water there is no life.”

In the “Sammy the Striped Bass” workshop, students will learn about the importance of water for animals and the importance of keeping water clean. In another workshop, students will learn about the life cycle of mosquitoes and how to prevent mosquito breeding.

“We hope the students will play a part in conservation and share the info with their parents about water conservation,” Means said.

This year will be the eighth Water Festival. Sponsors include the Georgia Water Planning and Policy Center, Georgia Soil and Water Conservation Commission, Keep Albany-Dougherty Beautiful, and the Flint RiverQuarium. For more information, contact Means at (229) 430-2900.

and a sun to represent aspiration.

More than 11,000 college students, alumni and supporters took part recently in the international vote to identify the winning emblems of HBCU culture throughout the United States. In addition to ASU’s “Soil to Sun” the other winners are:

- Jubilee Hall at Fisk University
- Alcorn State University’s Oakland Memorial Chapel
- Tougaloo College’s Woodworth Chapel
- Morgan State University’s Holmes Hall
- Bowie State University’s “Torch of Truth”

“Soil to Sun,” along with the other six structures, will be the subject of a multi-media documentary project which is set to debut in 2011.

According to Jarrett Carter, Sr., founding editor of hbcudigest.com, this project will create a new and exciting perspective on the tradition of HBCUs.

“It will provide an unprecedented opportunity for exposure and insight into your college’s new and exciting developments,” he wrote.

during World War II, Stephens became an entrepreneur in Waycross with businesses that included a motel, a restaurant, an automated car wash and a night club. He also worked for a number of years with Atlanta Life Insurance Co.

Even though he retired in 1977 at the age of 65, Stephens continues to own and operate Steve’s Motel, which he opened in 1956.

Stephens’ community involvement includes serving almost 30 years as a board member of Satilla Regional Medical Center and as a long-time member and finance officer for AMVETS.
